How My Experiences Have Motivated Me to Pursue BAM IS at the University

Earning a BAM IS degree will be one of the greatest achievements in my life. I am currently serving as an intern specializing in information system management in a healthcare organization. I plan to pursue business administration management of information systems at this university because of its national reputation, the strength of the BAM IS department, and the quality of the faculty research. In addition to encouraging academic excellence, your university fosters compassion in students.

Firstly, I chose to pursue business administration management information systems based on my experience and skills I earned as system developer and programmer in an IT firm after college. I have a strong interest in and passion for management information systems and systems administration in business environments. I have no doubt about my qualification because I have extensively studied computer technologies. I also had some additional makeup classes to improve my knowledge in computer technology and business administration skills.

Secondly, I have great enthusiasm in studying business administration management information systems and I have a strong belief that my experience, coupled with hard work, will be of great help in my studies. I also have a good command of information systems, both technical and theoretic. I am an extraverted person, who is always ready to attend to various research activities and lectures in business management. I feel that I am making progress not only in business administration but also in information systems.

Thirdly, because of my absolute desire of earning a university degree, I worked hard on my final examination and acquired excellent grades, especially in computer studies and business management studies. This performance encouraged me to review my career aspirations. Indeed, at my early ages, I intended to study computer science and I knew pursuing it demanded a hardworking, self-directed, and motivated personality. During my free time, I enrolled in an information systems college for six months, where I experienced a different world opening in my career life.

The six months in this college gave me the opportunity to formulate a different view about information systems. It was during this period that I interacted with different organizations dealing with information systems and business administration. As a result, I developed the passion to work in such environments. After completing a short course, I enrolled as an intern in an organization as junior systems developer. This organization gave me yet another opportunity to realize the importance of working as a manager in an information system environment.

After working in that company for two months, I applied to another internship at a healthcare organization as a junior system administrator. While in this position, my main tasks were user training, user support, system configuration, and system development. The aim of this internship program was to enhance my knowledge in system administration in organizations and explore my capabilities in dealing with information system users. This was one of the greatest opportunities I had during this period. My user support skills to the employees in the health care organization were great and diverse. The experience I gained in this particular field was a result of the problem solving approach I used during the user training and support, while working in the healthcare organization.

The variations of work experience which I gained from the two organizations gave me a broad view of the opportunities available in business administration management information systems. They were also the major drivers which enabled me to change my career from computer science to BAM IS studies. I was convinced that pursuing graduate studies in business administration management information systems would open up more opportunities in this field and enhance my knowledge in dealing with specific career in business administration and management of information systems.

My decision to pursue the program will have a positive impact on my career goals and objectives in the future. As I aspire to become a chief information officer in major organizations in the country, pursuing this program will be a major step towards achieving this vision. As a successful chief information officer, I must approach BAM IS studies with lots of professionalism from both practical and technical point of view. Becoming a chief information officer requires that I should have the experience and management skills in information systems, which I strongly believe that the program will help me acquire. During my studies, I will strive to improve my experience and examine areas, which I need to put more efforts in. Thus, I will be able to gain more knowledge in my areas of interest, especially information systems management.

In addition, my strong technical experience and skills have motivated me to pursue business administration management information systems at your university. The key strengths that I possess for success course include my passion for continued excellence and provision of exceptional contributions to business environments and organizations.
